

Portajohns

In the military, portajohns are everywhere.
From training grounds to remote deserts.

Portajohns are the first signs of burgeoning stability in a combat zone and the last thing
to be hauled away when a base shuts down.

Serviced twice a day or serviced once a week...
there is a certain amount of shared understanding
about the rhythms and uses of portajohns.

They smell like potent cleaners or days of shit.

They share secrets, scribbles, porn, jokes,
rumors, fantasies, and rants.

They are a slice of privacy from cramped living quarters, screaming drill sergeants, and undesirable duties.

A place to think and clear your head.

From inside they are a dark cave at night and a translucent womb during the day. From outside they are places to take a shit.
